The cold dry weather came and they did no good for several months, and then, when the warm rains came on they began to bear. We shipped two hampers, ate all we needed, or wanted and, as they stopped bearing, we let our stock eat them down. They began to show a new growth and soon began to bear a few peas. Thinking there was not enough to pay us to let them stand, or let the stock eat them again. We had some guava trees on the south side of the patch and tied the cattle so they could not rub the guavas down. When the stock did not big mess each week off the guava
